

Our heritage is at risk

without protections for the Tongass National Forest.

The Tongass National Forest is home to the greatest concentration of bald eagles in North America, but our national symbol of freedom could soon lose one of its most important homes. The Bush Administration is cutting deals that allow corporate special interests to move forward with logging plans in protected areas of the Tongass. Two years ago, the Bush Administration pledged to uphold the Roadless Area Conservation Rule that protects the Tongass and America's bald eagles. It's time the Bush Administration stopped cutting deals with corporate special interests and started keeping its word to the American people.

Bush Administration—stop cutting deals and start keeping commitments.
Uphold America's Roadless Area Conservation Rule.